

Finding Reality

Finding my reality requires me to stop being lost.

When I am lost in space & time, I have lost my true reality.

Lost in Space

When I am lost in Space, I don't know where I am.

When I forget where I am, I get very lost.

Lost in space, I am confused about which way to go.

When my direction is confused, I disallow my emotional power.

Being lost in space is being disconnected from my space, which is disempowering.

With enough emotional power, I am never lost, just exploring new and unknown realms.

I am lost in space when I am a long way from home.

When my Soul is Home, I am never lost in any space.

In absolute reality, I am never lost in space; I have just temporarily forgotten my place in the One Version of Everything.

Lost in Time

Where I am Lost in Time, I don't know when I am.

Where I forget when I am, I get very lost.

Lost in time, I lose my presence.

My presence is only present in the moment.

In each present moment, I connect & flow with time, which is divine.

I get lost in my past and my future.

My past is my present that has passed.

My future is a projection based on my past.

My present is received when I embrace what is occurring right now by seeing the opportunity for my life that is unfolding.

My presence allows my clarity of what is present.

My confusion will lose me in a re-creation of my past projected onto my future.

My presence allows my direction to be presented.

Lost in Reality

In Reality, I am never lost.

I am only ever lost in my imagination.

When I imagine my Self to be lost, I am.

In a dual reality world, I can be lost or I can be found.

I am only ever lost until I find my Self.

Seeking to find my Self is a statement of not knowing who I am.

When I don't know who I really am, I get lost in a reality of my own creation.

When I imagine my personality & character to be who I really am, I get lost in the reality of the drama that I am enacting.

I am never lost in the reality of my True Identity.

When I identify my true reality, I find my Soul.
