

The Inner Coach

Successfully Succeeding In Being Successful

Keith Collins

Money is rarely a measure of success.

Few people ever succeed in having enough money.

Having too much money will not ensure my success.

Successfully making money has nothing to do with being successful.

Being successful is a state of being.

Being full of success is the feeling of fulfilling one's life purpose.

I cannot be successful without a purpose in my life.

I cannot succeed as long as my purpose remains unfulfilled.

I cannot be successful and be discontent.

When I succeed in my life mission, I will be content.

When I am content with my mission in life and fulfilled with my purpose in life, I will succeed in being joyfully happy.

I cannot be successful and be unhappy.

When I succeed in being happy, I am being successful.

When I make my happiness dependent on being successful, I will fail.

When I need to attain success, I will fail.

When I need to achieve success, I will fail.

When I need to accomplish success, I will fail.

When I know that my success is assured, I cannot fail.

When my success is a duality of failure, I am not succeeding.

I am trying to accomplish, achieve or attain whatever it is that I believe will ensure my success.

There is nothing that I need to do to succeed.

There is nothing that I need to have to succeed.

There is no-one I need to be to succeed.

When I believe that there is, I am focusing on my present lack of success; which is my failure.

My life will forever continue to present opportunities for my Self to attain more emotional power, achieve more mental authority and accomplish more ably whatever I am physically doing.

My success is ensured.

My only failure is to fail to see how successful I already am.

I Achieve an objective.

An achievement is the completion of an aim or an objective.

An objective is what I aim to have.

When I have obtained my objective, I have achieved my aim.

I Accomplish a task.

An accomplishment is the completion of a task or the ability to use a skill or skill-set.

A task is what I need to accomplish skillfully.

When I accomplish a task or accomplish the skill or ability to do a task, I become accomplished in that skill or task.

I Attain a state of being.

An attainment is a state of being that I can consciously choose at will.

It is who I choose to be and the state of being that I attribute to my Self.

It is often confused with attaining a level of authority in my role, which is an objective; or attaining a level of skill in that role, which is an accomplishment.

I succeed in successfully gaining success when I attain the emotional power, achieve the mental authority and accomplish the physical ability to live my life happily & well.

Keith Collins

The Inner Coach

August 2013

theinnercoach@me.com

<http://www.theinnercoach.eu>