

The Way I See It

The way I see it is my view of the world. I can create my own reality with the view of my perspective, the view of my intention or the view of my vision. I can also choose to see my reality objectively, subjectively or adjectively.

An Objective Perspective is the view of other people.

Other people teach me an objective view of the world.

They teach me their perspective of reality as taught to them by other people.

When I am dependent on other people for my emotional energy, I believe that I have to share their objective view of the world.

I hold an objective view in my sub-conscious id, to which I turn for my objective perspective of the world.

My sub-conscious mind forms an objective perspective of what I should or should not have as my reality.

My Perspective is always Objective.

A Subjective Intention is the view of my Self.

I choose a subjective intention for my Self based on what I believe that I want or do not want to experience.

My intention is subjective when it is based on my experience and my beliefs about what is occurring to me.

When I become independent and capable of running on my own emotional energy, I am able to choose a subjective intention for my Self.

It is a choice for my Self by my Self.

I choose a subjective intention with my conscious mind.

It is my conscious ego self that forms a subjective intention for its Self.

I consciously decide what I want to do as a subjective conscious intention.

My Intention is always Subjective.

An Adjective Vision is the view of my Soul.

My Soul sees a vision for its Self adjectively.

Seeing adjectively requires the emotional awareness of my Beingness.

When I look to my Beingness with adjectivity, I realise my vision for my life.

When I am inner dependent on my emotional energy, I am adjectively connected to the source of my emotional power.

I see an adjective view of this world in my super-conscious mind.

It is my super-conscious entity that I turn to for my adjective vision of who I choose to be in life.

The super-conscious entity that is the beingness of my Soul sees who I really am with an adjective vision of my life.

My Vision is always Adjective.

The way I see it, I always have a choice and I have three options as to how I see my life and how I create my reality.

I can choose it subjectively, objectively or adjectively and I can opt for a perspective, an intention or a vision.

When I align all three choices with all three options, life starts to flow effortlessly.
