Three Commonly Held Beliefs In Our Society

Keith Collins

The Belief About Power

A common held belief in our society is that power comes from money.

This belief motivates us to earn money to have the power to choose.

The more money we have, the more choice we believe that we have and the more things we can choose to have.

Our freedom of choice is only limited by our lack of power created by insufficient money to buy whatever we choose.

This belief creates the belief that the rich are powerful and the poor are powerless.

It ensures that the rich stay rich and the poor are powerless to change it.

The rich have the power to attract money and the poor do not.

In our society, there is no distinction between being rich, which requires money, and being wealthy.

Money is used to buy a wealth of emotional experiences.

However, money is not emotional power and with enough emotional power, money is unnecessary for a truly emotional experience.

Emotional experience is not dependent on money but on emotional power.

Money is a poor substitute for emotional power, which is the power of our emotions not the power of our money.

The Belief About Authority

A common held belief in our society is that authority comes with status.

We believe that authority is either inherited or earned.

To earn authority, we are required to be well educated and we need to learn knowledge.

It is believed that the more knowledge we have, the more influence we have and the more authority we have to influence others.

This belief locks us into an educational system that is designed to benefit the ruling elite.

The authority of the ruling elite would be questioned by subjects who were taught to align with their authority and their beliefs.

The beliefs of the ruling elite are inherited and never taught in school.

In a 'free' society, we are free to choose whatever our ruling masters have declared is in the common good.

We are taught that we are free in our society because of a Justice System that allows our freedom and punishes and imprisons us when we do not do as we are instructed to by law.

My authority is my freedom to choose for my Self and to be the author of my own life.

It is my ability to be free of all external influences and flow instinctively & intuitively with my own inner guidance system.

My belief system either allows my authority or disallows my authority in favour of someone else's authority.

The Belief About Ability

A common held belief in our society is that ability comes with knowledge.

It is not only what I know but who I know.

The ability to do what we want is limited by our education system and our financial system.

Without money or knowledge our options are believed to be limited.

I am only able to do what is believed to be good and I am able to afford.

The ruling elite have no such belief.

They are brought up with the belief that nothing is impossible.

What they are not willing to do personally, they employ others to do.

Their ability is only limited by their ability to use other people.

My ability is limited only by my imagination.

Whatever I can imagine, I can create.

We are educated not to use our imagination so that creativity is controlled.

My imagination allows my authority to flow and connects my personal emotional power that enables my unique ability in life.

I believe that my ability is limited only by my authority to use my power and my power to choose my authority.
